Discretion of Auctioneer as to Bids and Their Acceptance:
An auctioneer is possessed of a large measure of discretion in the conduct of the sale and the acceptance of bids, but an auctioneer does not have discretion to violate an express condition imposed by an owner.

Ordinarily an auctioneer has the right to prescribe the rules of bidding: (a) Any bid not in conformity with the terms and conditions of sale as advertised and announced by the auctioneer is not entitled to conditions & (b) the auctioneer may refuse bids that are only trifling advances over those which were previously made.

The auctioneer may refuse to accept a bid whenever, in his or her judgment, it is not made in good faith or whenever the bidder is irresponsible or is laboring under some incapacity.

In the absence of a stipulation that the sale is without reserve, an auctioneer may, in the exercise of his or her discretion, refuse to accept a bid when it would be a virtual sacrifice of the property to accept it, and either adjourn the auction or withdraw the property from sale. In fact, in such a case, it would be the auctioneer's duty to withdraw the property. However, all that can be required is that the auctioneer exercise his or her best judgment, use due diligence in ascertaining the circumstances, and act in good faith.
